The fund's NAV increased by 1.88% in August. Affected by factors such as tightening overseas liquidity and record high temperature and droughts leading to power cuts in China, Hong Kong stocks remained jumpy and equity markets were down in August. In Hong Kong dollars, Hang Seng Index, CSI 300 and S&P 500 correspondingly retreated by 1.00%, 4.27% and 4.25% in the month. As to sectors in Hang Seng Index, most of the sectors obtained negative return, while Communication Services, Energy and Consumer Discretionary sectors performed with positive return.

Market Outlook:

China's export growth fell sharply in August, lower than market expectation. Chinese economy recovery momentum remained subdued and the government has stepped up its support to the economy. The State Council executive meeting in August released policy signal and announced additional measures to stabilize the economy. However, the manufacturing PMI still indicates contraction. Weakness in the real estate market, recent resurgence of COVID cases in certain regions with continuous pandemic control and uncertainty of external environment will still be disruptive to the market. We will adjust portfolio structure accordingly and appropriately balance sector allocation. We will keep balanced allocation between growth and value stocks. We focus on Consumption Internet leaders with attractive valuation and stable fundamentals and sectors which benefit from stabilizing growth policies.
