Fund Manager's Report

Market Review

The benchmark index (MSCI China Index) fell by 5.61% (Hong Kong dollar base) in February. The significant correction was mainly caused by the surging expectation that Fed will hike US interest rates faster than expected, which triggered the sell-down of global stock market. Blue chips that outperformed in January retreated noticeably in February. NAV of the fund fell by 4.16% in February. Financial sector suffered from deteriorating market sentiment and was the primary drag to fund's absolute performance. On the other hand, fund outperformed in information and technology, healthcare, and communications services by successful sector allocation and stock selection.

Market Outlook

The fundamentals of the major economies are solid and major stock indexes are gradually stabilizing. However, we still expect Hong Kong and China stock market to be volatile, as external political factors may cause uncertainties in global trading system. In February, we maintained our holdings of high-quality stocks while realized some profits from cyclical names. In the meantime, we built up positions in some undervalued H-share names, as we expect that China may launch more favorable reform measures than market expected after the National Congress, which could benefit such names.
